Methods of Instruction

Methods of Instruction	Lecture
Rationale	• Lecture is used to convey basic topical information to students, to explain and further analyze materials presented in course readings, and to provide directions for research and textual analysis.
Methods of Instruction	Discussion
Rationale	• Discussion works in conjunction with lecture to encourage students to think critically and clearly communicate their thoughts. Online discussion boards will reflect identified BCC policies for instructor-student contact. Discussion prompts will be designed to guide students to an understanding of historic and contemporary issues facing various ethnic groups.
Methods of Instruction	Technology (web, computer, video, audio, etc.)
Rationale	• Canvas will be the CMS for the online course. Students will have access to electronic journal articles, e-books, and streaming video through Barstow Community College Library. Audiovisual materials may be shown in the live class or embedded in the CMS.
Methods of Instruction	Group Work
Rationale	• Group work may be assigned at the instructor's discretion in order to facilitate more active student learning.

Assignments

Writing Assignments

- Students may be assigned a term paper requiring the use of both primary and secondary resources. At the instructor's discretion, students may also be assigned 'reaction papers' and written research assignments reflecting less length and complexity than the term paper, for the purpose of scaffolding research instruction to improve ultimate success with the term paper assignment. Writing assignments topics will summarize and respond to topics in African American Studies and will illustrate the student's understanding of the fundamental issues related to African American History, Politics and Art. Reports on field assignments that assess the influence of Black culture on contemporary, local society.
- Critical thinking assignments are required. They may be either written or presented, and may include, but are not limited to, the following:
  - Interpreting, analyzing and evaluating assigned readings from the text, handouts and other reading materials.
  - Evaluating, comparing and contrasting eras of African American history.
  - Distinguishing among the major cultural fields that make up the discipline of African
  - American Studies and assessing each one's contributions to the discipline as a whole.
- Analyzing, writing and discussing visualization exercises, music / audio exercises and spoken word/poetry exercises.
- Evaluating contemporary African American Studies as a multidimensional, unidimensional, interdisciplinary academic field and as a means for social and political change.
- Analyze, write and discuss visualization exercises, music / audio exercises and spoken word / poetry exercises.
- Research project (select a topic with the approval of the instructor): write a critical analysis of contemporary issues within African American communities (include a bibliography of no less than 5 books/journal articles).

Reading Assignments

- Students will read PDFs, print and electronic journal articles, print and electronic monographs, and instructor handouts, particularly copies of primary resources.
- Reading 30 to 50 pages per week from assigned textbook(s). Assignments may consist of either primary or secondary sources.

Class Presentations

- Students must present their term paper to the class, using visual aids as appropriate. This is a major component of course completion. This presentation may be assigned in PDF or other format in the online course.

Group Assignments

- Group work may be assigned at the instructor's discretion in order to facilitate more active student learning.

Other

- Oral History Interview - interview an African American community member and write an analytical paper examining the major themes of this person's life experiences as they relate to course themes, theories, readings, and films.

  Or

  Virtual Tour of African American History Culture

Methods of Evaluation	Rationale
Written Evaluations (essays, papers, lab reports, written homework, field trip report, reading responses, essay exam, etc.)	• Student writing will be assessed on college-level English skills (grammar, writing, and syntax), the correct use of citation, paraphrasing, and attribution, the level of clear and consistent organization of the paper, and the cogency and support of arguments made. Students must accurately assess the contents of both primary and secondary resources.
Objective Examinations	• The primary assessment for this course is the term paper. However, objective examinations involving short answer and essay questions may be given at the instructor's discretion. These are to be closed-book exams.
Oral Presentations	• Oral presentations are assessed on clarity, correct grammar and pronunciation, organization, factual support for arguments made, and the creative and appropriate use of visual aids. In the online course, spoken communication may not be assessed depending on use of technology; in this case, presentation and use of programs such as PowerPoint are assessed.
